

Bradford City Council

Bradford previously outsourced its IT and felt it necessary to look for a document handling and printing solution to handle their requirements in the "New World". This requirement involves producing electronic documents for Intranet and Internet distribution in addition to conventional printed A4 and continuous feed documents.

Sefas software offered Bradford a way to protect their investment in their existing Document Composition capability. Bradford has over 70 applications developed using Nipson's OpenPage, and were looking for an alternative solution to handle high volumes and to re-engineer these applications. Richard Howells comments, "Sefas was able to demonstrate that a migration to Sefas would be significantly less painful than re-writing the applications with an alternative product".